In order to recruit his failing health the king visited California in the United States cruiser Charleston as the guest of Admiral Brown in November, 1890. He received the utmost kindness and hospitality, both in San Francisco and in southern California. His health, however, continued to fail, in spite of the best medical attendance, and on the 20th of January, 1891, he breathed his last at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

For seven days they waited. On the morning of the lefth a bark was sighted, but soon its disappearing sails showed the castaways that they were not seen. Hope was waning, when, toward night, the lights of a steam-ship were discovered. It came near enough by Mitchell

TO EXPLORE ARCTIC REGIONS

proved by Experts. To Skirt the Coast of Ellesmere Land

-A Start to Be Made Next May-

A New Course to the Pole

Another arctic expedition is being fitted out in this city, having for its special object the exploration of the unknown coast west of Ellesmere Land, B. C., the eastern strip of which only is represented on the charts of that part of the world.

The proposed expedition will be led by Mr. Robert Stein of the United States geological survey, and will be supported by voluntary contributions, to be solicited from those interested in a better geographical knowledge of the lands of the arctic. Mr. Stein's plans have been submitted to a board of members of the Geographical Soclety. Gen. A. W. Greely and Commodore G. W. Melville, each of whom has had practical experience in polar explorations, indorse Mr. Stein's plan of operation as promising the largest result with the least amount of labor and danger. The General Plan.

The expedition will turn to the westward of Baffin's bay, skirting the southern extremity of Ellesmere Land. Former explorers have pursued their way toward the pole through the channels which divide the Ellesmere-Grinnell-Grant Land from Greenland, consequently the shore on each side has become well known, and bears the names given to it by the explorers, from Inglefield to Greely. The experience of these travelers has suggested that the more accessible avenues leading westward will be less dangerous to the explorers. Besides while these explorers were endeavoring to reach the north pole, and the latest trav-eler going over the path of his predecessors, the western shore of Ellesmere-Grin-nell Land has been neglected, except one point touched by Lockwood and Brainard. Mr. Stein does not believe it is necessary to defend polar exploration. He believes that the main object of these routes into the arctic area justify the discomforts and dangers which are too often the only reward of the explorer. He points out that the meteorology of the arctic forms the keystone of the whole science of the weather.

The science of geodesy will remain imperfect until the pendulum has been swung close to the very pole. Important additions to the science of magnetism may be looked for from researches in the vicinity of the magnetic pole. Especially the fascinating phenomenon of the aurora, the grandest in-stance of light without heat, may yield re-markable disclosures when studied in the area of its greatest intensity

To Start Next May. Mr. Stein proposes to start next May, and the palace yards, but the king had weak- to trace this unknown shore so far as car ened and fied to a house in the harbor, placing a guard on the bridge leading to it, with instructions to shoot any one who should approach. The household troops in base of operations will be at the entrance should approach. The household troops in the barracks remained neutral and the palace was refused to the insurgents by the king's orders. The revolutionists made no declaration, as they expected the king to come to the front and take the lead in proclaiming the old constitution. The volunteer riflemen promptly turned out, and many of the citizens took up arms for the government. At the request of the United States minister, Mr. Merrill, an appointee of the previous Cleveland administration, a body of marines was landed and marched up to the legation, where they remained.

Minister Merrill also furnished the government troops with 10,000 rounds of ammunition from the Adams. The insurgents were surrounded and isolated from the populace outside. The ministry drew up a written summons to them to surrender, which was served on them by Hon. S. M. Damon. They refused to receive it, and a conflict began at once between their three field pieces and sharpshooters in the operathouse and other buildings commanding the bleces and sharpshooters in the opera and other buildings commanding the depot.
